Pré-requis obligatoires

There are no strict prerequisites in terms of academic background or prior experience. Nonviolent Communication (NVC) is an approach to communication and conflict resolution that is accessible to most individuals. Here are some elements that may be helpful but are generally not strictly required:

- Open-mindedness: NVC is based on an empathetic approach to communication, so it's important to be open to the idea of exploring your own emotions and those of others.
- Willingness to learn: Like any new skill, NVC requires practice and learning. It's important to be willing to dedicate time to acquiring these skills.
- No prior experience required: NVC is accessible to everyone, regardless of your academic or professional background. It can be useful in many everyday life situations, whether at home, at work, or in other contexts.
- Commitment to nonviolence: NVC is built on the principles of nonviolence and mutual respect. It's essential to adhere to these values to fully benefit from the training.
- Readiness to practice: NVC is learned through practice. It's important to be prepared to actively participate in the exercises and discussions offered during the course.
- Active listening: NVC emphasizes empathetic listening. Being able to actively listen to others is a valuable asset.
